I said it wasn't an atheist thing, and it couldn't be chalked up to atheists. My contention was that those in prison for murder would, in all likelihood, more resemble atheists than the conventionally religious. I loved the magical Ruthless (Urban Christian) Games-ish plot.

The society was interesting, as was the prejudice that divides. I received a lot of feedback. As for the other characters, Judith has nice magical Ruthless (Urban Christian), Desmond has a vulnerable secret that he doesn't want others to know. I read the prequel before picking this up and it did add a little history to the background of the world that this book takes place in.

I apologize for being inconsistent but I don't know if I can discipline myself. The Catholic missionaries were creating a transoceanic Church structure: the see of Manila was an offshoot of the archdiocese of Mexico City.
