There are also children from all over the world here in England. All of this made us very frightened, but my mum insisted that it was still necessary for us to make the journey so that we would be safe until the war ended. The school there is run by a man ready to weigh and measure any parcel of human nature. Factories and the Machinery inside them This one is from the narrator and runs throughout the novel: the idea that the ugly, square, fact-based, oppressive mills look like fairy palaces with elephants in them when they are lit up at night. Sometimes a little input from the writer can be useful to the reader. You want change. Bram Stoker. I just remember that it was very scary, everybody very nervous and none of us really knowing what was going on. Please re-enter.
