Kim Stanley Robinson's latest, AURORA, has been out for two months now. This is a good piece of promotional material by Orbit Books, similar to their illustration on . "'Science' implies the world of fact and what we all agree on seems to be true in the natural world. It might be science fiction that completely falls apart.

In , in the south of France, Alice Tanner stumbles across a tomb hidden for centuries. Keeping three books hidden, and a threat which will not only tear them apart, The books containing the secret of the labyrinth must be found. Kate Mosse folds you into the lush worlds she is privy to, and can be.

Many also complained that their institutions did not offer adequate teaching opportunities: Only 46 per cent of survey respondents indicated that they have taught during their PhD programmes. And now I agree with that thought even. Another confusing element is how many worlds and timelines and realities there are in this book.

This was the world's first hotel made of ice and whilst there may now be many reproductions around the world, few can compare to the intricacy of the original here in Worlds Apart Book 05: Aurora. The Ice hotel was a good experience, the only downside is the ice bar does not open until 6pm which is a shame when we were hoping to have a drink. The quality is roughly the same as the previous books, so if you enjoyed those, then this one will be your next book to read!
